CRIMINAL COURT: - Wm. Hunter, Judy There is nothing of importance being lone in this Court at present. The follow-ng order and notice was drawn by Attory General Harrington on Wednesday and entered upon record:

Magistrates within the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court are hereby notified that they will be held to a strict complines with the directions of the Code while performing the duties of Committing agistrates, especially in regard to taking bond for the appearance of the prosestor and all other witnesses examined after a fallure to comply with the require-ments of the law will be followed by a motion for a citation against the default-ing Magistrate. Efforts will be made to have judgment for costs in every such proceeding awarded sgainst such Magis-trate.

It is reported that some of the Magistrates have, under color of authority, un-lawfully required the citizens when comlawfolly required the citizens when com-plaining to them of a public wrong, to pay the fees of the Magistrate and officer executing the writ, before the warrant will be issued by them, thereby imposing a fine upon the citizen while in the per-formance of a laudable and legal duty; furthermore, that said Magistrates prose-cute and obtain their fees again from the State. No efforts will be spared to correct and runish this abuse of authority and State. No efforts will be spared to correct and punish this abuse of authority and system of extortion.

Annie's trunk—one of them at least—was attached and brought into Court, and during the trial, while the Court's attention was stracted in another direction, the gentle Maud, fearing that the case was about to go against her, raised the lift and freezing to a half dozen of the linen chem—garments, scooted with them.

She slid out the door and down the stairs before anybody knew what she was up to, but Constable Joe Robertson soon saw how the land lay, and made after her, giving her a hot chase through the alley, and catching up with her somewhere in the region of the bayes. Politely offering her his arm and volunteering to "tote her bundle," he escorted her back to the courtroom, where we left her and Aunie arguing the ownership of the duds.
